Saturday, May 7, was held the first May Day Fete for Adams county, of the public schools of the county. The literary contests were held in Brua Chapel in the morning and the out-door contests on the athletic field at college in the afternoon. In the Grammar schools of the same districts, Biglerville had an advantage. Report was made of a donation of $250 by the Menallen Monthly Meeting of the Religious Order of Friends for the furnishing of a room in hospital.

Assaulted with Axe.

The York Springs Comet in its issue of this week tells of the narrow escape of the county from another murder case.

On Wednesday of last week two colored men employed on the road construction work had an altercation at the camp near York Springs and one of them struck the other fellow on the head with an axe, cutting a long gash and peeling loose the scalp for several inches. As the man swung the axe the blow was deflected by the back of the implement catching on the corner of an overhead bunk which saved the other fellow's life as he only received a glancing blow instead of the full force of it. The injured man's wounds were dressed by a local physician after which he was sent to Harrisburg for further treatment. He returned to the camp this week and expects to go to work again. His assailant has disappeared.

Presbyterian Pastor Installed.

Rev. William C. Robinson, a graduate this year of Princeton Seminary, was installed on Wednesday evening as pastor of the Presbyterian church of this place, to succeed Rev. F. E. Taylor, who was the pastor for about seven years and who resigned about nine months ago to take up Near East Relief work in Philadelphia.

The sermon of the installation services was preached by Professor J. G. Machen, head of the department of Greek at Princeton Seminary and who took for his text "For the things which are seen are temporal but the things which are not seen are eternal."

Other ministers having parts in the ceremony were, Rev. William L. Smith of Hunterstown, who read the Scriptures and Dr. Harold A. Robinson, of Philadelphia, Secretary of the Presbyterian Publishing and Sunday School work, who offered prayer. The charge to the new pastor was delivered by Rev. John D. Lindsay, of Shippenburg, moderator of the Carlisle Presbytery, and the charge to the congregation by Rev. D. W. Woods, pastor of the Lower Marsh Creek church and a former pastor of the Gettysburg church. A very large audience was present at the installation services.

Rev. Wm. C. Robinson, the new pastor, has been preaching in the church every Sunday for several months.

Town Manager.

Carlisle has taken a step that Gettysburg would be wise to follow. Our sister town has a town manager, always on the job, performing duties fixed by ordinance. Carlisle has a man giving his whole time to town management, while Gettysburg continues the antique farce of running a town on the principle of what is everybody's business is no body's business.

A town manager submits a budget which he can not sidestep or overstep. He makes monthly reports to council, he does the work of an engineer and supervisor of streets and sewers. There are towns where the manager does the work of secretary, treasurer under bond, engineer, street superintendent, giving his whole time to the job of conducting the business of the town and managing that it is in a clean, sanitary condition. Any well managed business must have a manager, but a town's business is usually without a manager, going in any old way because there is no official paid for his entire time to be on the job. Why not get in the class with Carlisle for an efficient, responsible business town management, with a town manager on the job.

Collateral Tax Doubled

The new collateral inheritance tax law will have few apologists and will be universally condemned, taking a collateral inheritance tax of ten per cent. instead of five per cent. The Republican politicians of the State want more money to spend and make more taxes and higher taxes in order to get the money. The direct inheritance tax of 2 per cent. remains at that figure.

THE WAR OVER AGAIN

THE ALLIES HAND ULTIMATUM TO GERMANY.

Germany Replies—Agreeing to Fulfill Terms of Treaty of Versailles.

On May 5, the Ultimatum of the Allies to Germany was signed by Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy and Japan and delivered to the German Envoy by Lloyd George. It required Germany to declare within six days whether she intended to execute without reservation her obligations as defined by the Reparation Commission to fulfill the disarmament stipulations and to proceed immediately with the trial of war criminals. If these demands are not complied with Ruhr Valley would be occupied on May 12.

On May 10 Germany accepted the Allied ultimatum. The Reichstag by a vote of 221 to 175 yielded to the final demands of the Allied Powers, and in so doing agreed to fulfill the terms of the Treaty of Versailles "to the capacity" of the nation to do so.

Meanwhile Lloyd George, as President of the Allied Conference writes to Secretary of State of the United States inquiring whether this "government is disposed to be represented in the future, as it was at an earlier date, at allied conferences, wherever they may meet, at the Ambassadors' Conference, which sits at Paris, and on the Reparations Commission. We are united in feeling that American cognation of our proceedings and, where possible, American participation in them, will be best facilitated by this."

The United States government replies,

"Mr. George Harvey, appointed Ambassador to Great Britain, will be instructed on his arrival in England to take part as the representative of the United States in the deliberations of the Supreme Council. The American Ambassador to France will be instructed to resume his place as unofficial observer on the conference of Ambassadors, and Mr. Roland W. Boyden will be instructed to sit again in an unofficial capacity on the Reparations Commission."

The Government of the United States notes with pleasure your expression of the belief of the representatives of the allied Governments assembled in London that American cooperation in the settlement of the great international questions growing out of the World War will be of material assistance."

The Republican administration having captured the offices—the whole issue last fall of the Republican machine and politics being the offices—is now travelling in the footsteps of that great Democratic President Woodrow Wilson for his way is the only way for World peace.

A Sleeping Beauty

By CELIA ROSE

(Copyright, 1921, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Hello, Muggins!" Johnny Deeds shouted from the road. The figure in the rocking chair upon the Martin porch did not lift its eyes from the book in hand. Johnny halted again—again his answer was the silence of unconsciousness—clearly Louise Martin did not mean to admit that she had ever responded to the name of Muggins. Johnny grinned cheerfully and scuttled up the winding way, to pause at the steps, doff his hat and say, with an elaborate obeisance: "Is the—ah! ahem—lady of the home at home?"

"Not to—vagrabonds," the rocking chair's occupant returned tranquilly, its eyes still down. Next minute two warm hands fell over them—the head holding them was drawn gently back and a kiss planted upon a pair of soft red lips.

"That's how you wake a sleeping beauty, isn't it?" Johnny asked guilelessly. Louise had risen and faced him, a furious scarlet flooding her cheeks. She dared not speak—if she did, she would either laugh or cry. Either meant triumph for Johnny, the lawless—she knew of old his capacity to torment her. Silently she turned to go inside—then Johnny caught both her hands and sat her down, not very gently, saying: "No, you don't! Not in this company. What ails you, anyway, Mugg? Used to be the best sort of sport, you did."

"You mean—I was a barbarian, the same as you," Louise burst out. "Well, I have learned better manners. Unless you can do the same—please keep away from here!"

"H—m! Is that a true word—or just makeup?" Johnny asked, the least shade of seriousness creeping into his face. Louise glared at him. "Will you never grow up?" she stormed. "You know, you must understand, my position here in my uncle's house. His wife is the very properest person—with a leaning to wild ways under the rose. If she had heard you say 'Muggins' I should never have been anything else to her—of course, in strict privacy, she makes Uncle Ben think her a sort of grown-up snow white. Already she hates me, because I see through her. If she knew anything of those mad, happy old days when we were playfellows, thinking and knowing no evil, she would have a whip ready to her hand, and would use it to put me through my paces."

"She shan't know, girl. I'm willing to kick myself a mile!" Johnny exploded. "I ought to have thought—of course, the neighbors know something—of the dual personality of the new Mrs. Benjamin Martin. Still, I honestly didn't dream of making you trouble. Forgive me all my impertinence and let me know if I can help you in any way."

"Only in—a very hard way—for me," Louise said, sighing. "That is, by staying away until—be sure I'm not here for always. Uncle says Martin blood forbids my working. I have another notion as to that—I'd rather scrub floors for a living than stay here much longer."

"You need not stay a day—remember?" Johnny began significantly. Louise looked over his head, flushing deeply. "Don't let's think of impossibilities," she said, but sighed as she said it. Johnny laid a brotherly hand on her shoulder, asking: "Haven't you got over anything?" In reply she could only shake her head and turn away, biting her lips.

Johnny strode up and down the porch, his face dark, his brow deeply furrowed. Thus Mrs. Martin came upon him and smiled unpleasantly as she glanced from one to another of the pair. So did the man in her wake, who was by appearance neither young nor old, good nor bad, but tremendously well groomed and well tailored, as redolent, indeed, of affluence as the perfectly appointed car which had brought him and his hostess. At sight of him Louise hurried away, to be recalled imperiously, then bidden in a velvet voice please to order tea and serve it. Johnny must stay for it, of course—a balanced party was so much pleasant. Moreover, he had been so long in coming over, he must be specially well treated in hope of a return. All this cooing, avid eyes the while measuring his six-foot-one of vigorous young manhood, his handsome tanned face and vital close-cropped curls. Mrs. Martin, fair, forty, languishing, approved all of them thoroughly—all the more that he made her escort. Franklin Ware, seem so faded and meager. She looked at Johnny, indeed, with much the same gleaming expression that Ware gave to Louise.

Johnny saw and shivered—not for himself, but for the prospect before Louise. He got no private word with her, though he hovered to the last allowable moment. He could not even watch over her. Mrs. Benjamin was too wholly bent on his captivation. But he had a sense that she was suffering deeply from the glances and compliments of Ware. Small need for Mrs. Benjamin to say, as she did when she went half-way down the walk with him: "Matters are arranging themselves so beautifully. We shall have a wedding before we know it. Louise will make the most beautiful bride in the world."

He galloped away, ready to swear at life and things. If only Louise would forget that cursed Melville and marry her faithful Johnny, all things would come right. He was sure she did not love the real Melville, but rather an image she called by his name and set up in her heart's inner shrine. "She really is a Sleeping Beauty," he said to his heart, reverting to the happy audacity whose memory made him tingle. "Once she waked up, she'd have to know life and things. My business is to wake her. I wonder how I shall do it."

After three days of pondering he hit upon something that made him cry aloud: "The very thing." Then write a letter, hasty but full of details. After he had dispatched it to a distant address he gave his whole mind and time to haunting the Martin establishment, bent on knowing all that passed regarding his beloved. There was need of his constant vigilance. Franklin Ware was a desperate wooer, and ably seconded by Mrs. Benjamin, who, of course, brought her husband to seeing with her eyes.

Therefore he said seriously to Louise, that with no wish to constrain her inclination, he felt bound to say she would both please and relieve him by providing for herself so finely. Franklin Ware was not, to be sure, in his first youth—he had, moreover, had a harvest of very wild oats. To offset that, he was rich, well born, possessed of a standing that gave his wife entree everywhere—and eager to make her the most magnificent settlements. Furthermore—here Uncle Benjamin half sighed—he himself could do no more for his brother's only daughter than give her a home and maintenance while he lived. All he had was well tied up beyond diversion in any direction. And it would pain him deeply to think either of leaving his niece unprotected, or to have her go to work. In the name of the blood he begged her to save him such discomfort—she listened, shivering—not over what was said, but left unsaid, namely, that Uncle Ben might be now a millionaire, if he had not rears back voluntarily paid huge sums to clear his brother of debt, and keep the family name spotless. Then, too, so long as the brother lived, he had been generous in help to him, who was the soul of imprudent kindness. Louise felt to the marrow of her bones all she owed the good narrow man, too fine bred to recall benefits bestowed. It seemed to her she must obey him—or die. Death, indeed, seemed her only refuge—she could not think of accepting Johnny with all her heart belonging to Melville.

Then when she was most distraught came Melville's letter—in mad haste. "Johnny writes me you have great prospects—if you will accept them," it said. "My dear girl, don't be a fool. Accept the goods the gods provide, and thus justify the admiring friendship of

"Hastily and heartily yours. "ARTHUR MELVILLE." Johnny saw her read it—not for naught had he studied postal schedules and haunted the carrier's route. As she crushed the sheet within a shaking hand, he touched her shoulder gently, saying: "Honey—trust yourself to me. Even if I can't ever make you love me, it will be better than—the other inevitable thing."

"I can't! I am too ashamed. To think I—oh, no decent man ought ever to look at me!" Louise cried hotly; then with a sob gave him the letter. When he had read it he turned to see her sitting with bowed head, face hidden in her hands, and trembling all over. "I believe you have saved me—from—the very worst," she said. "If you will have me—" breaking off there and drooping lower still.

He married her next day—to the scandal of Mrs. Benjamin. Time's whirligig indeed brings revenge. Before the honeymoon waned Louise hid her face in his shoulder to say, happily, "I was in a trance, Johnny, dear!"

How in the world did you care enough to wake me?" "Oh, I have a taste for sleeping beauties," Johnny answered, tweaking her ear—but with eyes that misted a little in spite of him.

Picture in a Spanish Barn.

A great stir has been caused among lovers of art by the discovery of an ancient masterpiece in a barn. In the Spanish province of Estremadura, it is a fine painting of a Madonna, with the infant Jesus on her lap, a black-robed monk on one side and a white-robed monk on the other—these being probably meant for St. Benedict and St. Bernard. It is painted on wood and is less than four feet square. It is thought to have been produced about 1500 to 1550. To prevent Americans and other outsiders from snatching up this treasure, and taking it out of the country, a millionaire of Bilbao has advanced the large sum demanded by the owner of the barn and has offered it to the Spanish government. Meanwhile it has been placed in the Prado museum at Madrid.

How Is Your Hearing?

We are not made so conscious in our ordinary occupations of ear deficiency as we are of eye deficiency. Unless you are so deaf as to be a marked man, you can hear the honk of an automobile or the clang of a street car bell in time to get out of the way; and unless you are so deaf as to be a marked man you can hear the talk of your companions and distinguish what they say.

As a matter of fact, in our ordinary, civilized life, the man with normal ears has about three times as much keenness of hearing as he is called upon to use; whereas, even the man with normal eyes has no such excess of sight keenness. In other words, you can get along with less hearing than you actually possess. Therefore, you are not aware of the fact that you may be below normal, so far as hearing is concerned.—American Magazine.

Coal Tax Bill Approved.

Governor Sprout on Wednesday signed the coal tax bill by which a state tax of 1-2 per cent ad valorem is to be collected on all coal mined in Pennsylvania. The bill is expected to bring a revenue into the State of from seven to ten million dollars. The clause in the bill providing that the tax could not be passed back to the consumer was omitted as finally adopted and passing the buck of paying the taxes is back to the people. How long, oh how long!

Trees Given Away.

The Pennsylvania Department of Forestry this spring has shipped 12,601 shade and ornamental trees from its four nurseries for planting in various parts of the State. All of the trees were given free to other State departments, State hospitals, shade tree commissions, school authorities, colleges, fresh air farms, and parks. There were twenty different species of trees represented in the shipments. The largest number were white pines, followed by elms, pitch pines, Banks pines, and Norway spruce. Most of the trees were suitable only for ornamental planting, not for street or shade trees. Consequently, the short supply of shade trees was exhausted early in the shipping season, and the Department of Forestry was obliged to refuse many applications for shade trees which it would not fill.

Twenty-two municipalities were given free 3,065 shade trees for planting along streets, in parks and for memorial purposes. To the public schools, there were given 747 trees for beautifying the grounds of twenty-six buildings. More than 2,500 trees were sent to churches, cemeteries, parks, and public institutions.

Colleges and fresh air farms planted 4,350 trees given to them by the Department of Forestry, and 1,852 trees were distributed to other State departments and State institutions for planting on property owned by the Commonwealth.

Reapportionment Bills.

Pennsylvania has been reapportioned for Congressional, Judicial, Senatorial and Legislative purposes as provided by the Constitution. There might be no Congressmen at Large. The four extra Congressmen the State is entitled to go to Westmoreland, Cambria, Allegheny and Philadelphia. The full congressional delegation from the State will be thirty-six, instead of thirty-two and four at large. Adams County remains with York.

The judicial apportionment leaves the present district to which Adams belongs as it is at present, six new additional judges are provided. The Senatorial and Legislative apportionment bill makes no changes of the status of Adams, Adams and Franklin, the Senatorial districts and Adams a single Legislative district.

Teachers Salary Increase Bill Signed.

The Edmonds' bill, providing schedule for teachers salaries as proposed by State Superintendent Finnegan, establishing qualifications for teachers and a new system of state aid for districts has been approved and signed by Governor Sprout. The Act establishes minimum qualifications for teachers and how these qualifications are to be maintained during the summer to entitle a teacher to the minimum of $100 a month. The program proposed will take six years to become effective. The State will pay a liberal amount of the minimum salary, so that the entire increase does not fall upon the districts.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Finnegan, with the salaries increased is giving his attention to increasing length of school term. He declared the schools in 4th class districts, which includes Adams county, must be open at least 150 days beginning next fall, and for the term starting in September, 1922, the term must be extended to at least 160 days. This will mean the adding of one month to the school term of many of the rural schools in the county which now are in session only seven months. The compulsory attendance laws have been made stricter. Regular attendance now is required of pupils between 14 and 16 years of age unless they have completed a course of study equal to 6 yearly grades in the public schools. It also is provided that permits for farm service, etc., that have been issued by the school boards must now be granted in accordance with regulations prescribed by Supt. of Public Instruction. It is not Dr. Finnegan's desire to stop the practice of permitting older pupils to help at home, but he wants to break up a practice that has been abused in many rural sections and see that the boys and girls manage to get a maximum amount of schooling prescribed for each year.

Teachers are being elected in a number of the districts of the county. At Biglerville all the teachers were re-elected with the exception of Miss Esta M. Bream who was not an applicant. That vacancy will be filled in the near future. Conrad C. Muehle was re-elected principal; Ruth A. McIlhenny and Eva C. Deardorff, teachers in the High School; Esta L. Slaybaugh, Chloe B. Asper and Bess Refensperger in the lower grade schools.

At Littlestown, Miriam E. Hepler and William R. Duncan were re-elected on the teaching staff but declined to accept. Those who did accept were Roy D. Knouse, principal; J. Romaine Miller, Harry Schwartz, Norma V. Burgoon, Mary D. Hann, Helen M. McDowell, Gladys E. Burgoon and Mrs. George R. Julius. The teachers of the Arendtsville High School for 1921-1922 have not been selected as yet. H. C. Lady has been re-elected as primary teacher; Miss Eva Boyer, intermediate teacher; and Miss Anna Bosserman, grammar school teacher.

As to Presidential Postmasterships.

By his executive order of March 31, 1917, Mr. Wilson placed first, second and third class postmasters, now numbering nearly 13,000, under the civil service rules. Mr. Taft had done the same for the fourth class postmasters, now numbering nearly 40,000. There are some 52,000 postmasters of all classes. Mr. Wilson's order applied only to post offices where a vacancy arises by the death, resignation or removal of the incumbent. The National Civil Service Reform League recommended to President Harding and Postmaster General Hays that Mr. Wilson's order be modified so as to provide that, at the end of the terms of all incumbents of Presidential Postmasterships who were not appointed by competitive examination, the place be filled by the examination system. This recommendation was made last month. Mr. Harding has now modified Mr. Wilson's order. His order directs that, in case of a future vacancy of the place of a first, second or third class Postmaster, if such vacancy isn't filled by the nomination of some person in the competitive classified service with the requisite qualifications, the Postmaster General shall inform the Civil Service Commission. That body shall at once "hold an open competitive examination to test the fitness of applicants to fill such vacancies." After the examination papers have been rated, the commission must certify the results to the Postmaster General, "who shall submit to the President the name of one of the highest three qualified eligibles for appointment to fill such vacancy," in the absence of any proof of disqualification.

The examination is more or less a farce. There is no oral or written examinations. The applicants make statements covering questions of scholarship, where he went to school and graduated, his business experience and a few other little details of that kind. Then comes a rating and Republican Politician Postmaster-General names one of the highest three and the trick is turned under the name of civil service reform.

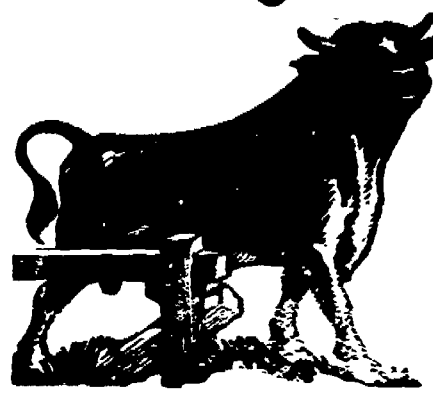

York County Murderer Caught.

On May 13, 1919, York county citizens were horrified with the news that during the night Gabriel Perrachia and James Joseph Critchlow were murdered at City Station along the Pa. R. R. tracks. The skulls of both men were crushed in by their assailant. They were railroad track hands. The only other occupant of the shack was Curtis Sippel, who disappeared He was arrested in Kentucky a few days ago. On May 11, 1921, Sippel confessed to District Attorney Rochow, of York, in following words:

"I realized that I killed them. I can't tell why. It was just like a dream. I awoke as if I had had the nightmare, turned on the light and saw Perrachia dead on his cot and turned and found Critchlow also dead. It came to my mind right away that I must have done it. I don't know why, but the doors were all locked and no one else could have done it but me."

WANTED—Clean White Rags at Compiler Office.

THIS LITTLE GIRL NEVER EVEN HAD A FIRST NAME

And doesn't know how old she is—White
Barbarians within sight of World's Biggest City

Fifty miles from New York City, in the historic Ramapo Hills, the authorities found a white family in rags and tatters—man, wife and four kiddies. They knew themselves as Thompson, but none had a first name. The little girl in the above picture was the oldest child. Kind folks have taken her in hand, given her the name "Ella" and are teaching her. The family are not idiots but they are nearly as backward as savages.
